WHITE BAY POWER STATION

History of Building

The area now known as Bays West has for millennia been Gari Gurad / Nura (Saltwater Country) and Nattai Gurad / Nura (Freshwater Country), celebrated for its sandstone, cliffs, and shelters. White Bay, on the Balmain Peninsula, is a landmark of the precinct.

Its Power Station, built 1912–1917 to power Sydney's rail network, is the only one retaining pre-1950s machinery. Decommissioned in 1984, it was listed on the NSW Heritage Register in 1999 and also recognised by the National Trust and National Estate. Recent conservation by Placemaking NSW has safeguarded the site as a future public and cultural space.

REMEMORY

THE 25TH BIENNALE OF SYDNEY

Rememory connects the delicate space between remembering and forgetting.

Rememory explores the space between remembering and forgetting, reclaiming erased or repressed histories. The 25th Biennale will spotlight marginalised narratives, untold stories, and how memory shapes identity, belonging, and community.

Artistic Director Hoor Al Qasimi—recently named the world's most influential figure in contemporary art—will lead the Biennale with a community-driven curatorial approach, bringing together local and international artists to honour place, history, and innovation.
